Crystal Clear Psychic Maggie discusses her psychic past, and how it shapes her readings today.

from the editor

Greetings, and happy February! In the spirit of Valentine's Day, our February issue is focused on love. One of our passions at Crystal Clear Psychics is providing psychic insight that brings more love into your life.

With the big day rapidly approaching, we break down 4 tips that can make Valentine's Day a more spiritual experience for both you and your partner.

Valentine's Day can also drudge up psychic energies from past relationships. We offer our perspective on how to leave the past behind, love yourself, and prepare the way to a brand new romance.

Harry Styles is proving to be more than just another famous face from reality TV. With growing star power and seemingly boundless charisma, he just might have what it takes to stay in the spotlight over the long term. We examine his psychic signature to find out why this is the case—and who his valentine might be this year.

Finally, we're thrilled to bring you exclusive insight from psychic Maggie (pin 7791), a highly-gifted practitioner and a favourite among clients. She discusses the psychic past in her own family, and how she embraced her own gifts to serve others.

Thank you as always for being a valued client. We're the most respected psychic service in the USA because of you.

Love and Light,

Lauren X

When did you first discover you were psychic?

I grew up in a very open household. Two of my great grandfathers were healers, and my grandmother is a tarot reader, so I guess it's always been around me. Growing up, it was normal to see tarot readings and listen to conversations about astral travel in our house. I was told from a young age that I had healing hands, but I never took my gifts seriously. I thought I knew what common sense was; but eventually I realised the difference between common sense and spiritual gifts. After a series of challenging events, I was invited to join a Psychic circle. I was amazed at the information that came to me. Once I learned to recognise the feelings and visions I was having, and how to communicate them verbally as well as visually, I realised I could really help others along their journey.

What are your talents and what do they mean? I.e. Clairvoyant?

I am a natural empath and clairvoyant, as well as a psychic medium and healer. This means I work with images, feelings and energy. I'm able to see the situation clearly as well as feel the emotions.

What tools do you use and why? What is their history?

In my psychic practice, meditation is very valuable tool. I always take time for meditation before I start work, and give thanks after. I also love working with my Angel cards—they give me great joy.

One remarkable story from a recent client?

Each reading and each client is special. Often I don't remember what I've said—especially if I'm working on a mediumship level. The great pleasure I get is when we have breakthrough moments - I call these the 'Oh Yes!' moments. They happen when the light bulb comes on and I know we have locked onto the issues at hand.

I did have a delightful client a while back who was very sad and suffered a great loss. I connected with her loved one and could not stop laughing. We laughed and laughed and I knew that the spirit I was channelling wanted to hear her laugh, and wanted her to smile again. It was a magic moment.

Why do you enjoy working for Crystal Clear Psychics?

Crystal Clear Psychics really do care for the client's experience and the psychic's wellbeing. I love the fact that we can connect from all over our lovely planet, showing that energy is truly universal.

HARRY'S PSYCHIC STYLES

There are plenty of talented people who top the ranks of reality TV every year, but for most of them, a real career in show business is still a long shot. Beautiful faces and voices abound, but very few names stay put in the public imagination.

Harry Styles is one of those names. He is one of those rare cases who, despite his flash-in-the-pan beginnings, seems destined for lasting stardom. Yes, he is talented and charismatic, and yes, he looks good through a camera lens. But his astrological profile gives deeper clues as to why his star is shining so bright—and who his Valentine might be this year!

Born on the 1st February in 1994, Harry Edward Styles is an Aquarius under the Chinese sign of the Rooster. He was raised by his mother in Cheshire, along with his sister Gemma, and showed an interest in the stage from his early years. His first band, called White Eskimo, gained local popularity—and in a sign of things to come, won a local band contest. Who knew that a few short years later, he would be performing at the closing ceremony at the London Olympics.

Styles' Aquarian nature makes him affable, curious, cool and detached. This is partly why he is a fan favorite: Aquarius is an air sign that lends him a sense of mystery and "come what may." At the same time, his demeanor is easy-going and highly sociable—also classic Aquarian traits. He has no problem turning on the charm and winning new fans wherever he goes.

The Chinese sign of Rooster is what gives Styles that bright sheen whenever a spotlight shines his way. Roosters are proud creatures that love to be the focus of others. Strutting around stage while thousands of fans scream your name is enough to make some people faint, but Roosters like Harry feel right at home basking in all the attention. His Aquarian traits are lucky in this respect, as he is likely to maintain a good perspective on fame and fortune, despite his enjoyment of it.

One of the luckiest aspects of Harry's chart is a very close trine (a beneficial 120 degree angle) between his sun in Aquarius and moon in Libra. This allows his emotional, spiritual and physical beings to align and project authenticity into the world. No wonder the name "One Direction" was his idea!

It's true that Harry Styles has all the signs of a globally-appealing personality who could be in the public eye for years to come. But what about his relationship prospects? Will the object of his affections change with the seasons, or will he find someone steady to anchor him?

A string of relationships with singers and models quickly led to the newly-minted star's most highly-publicized romance: A brief stint with American pop star Taylor Swift. This relationship ended in short order, but rumour has it the flame is burning again. Is Taylor Swift the ideal Valentine for Styles?

In some ways, yes. The close conjunction between his Mars and her Venus is a compelling suggestion of compatibility. Swift is also a fiery Sagittarius, and fire is completely lacking in Harry's chart. He derives intense creative inspiration from Taylor, while she gains more open perspectives from him.

Harry needs a Valentine that will give him a little bit of grounding (he has a lot of air in his chart) while not stifling him. He will also benefit from someone with significant fire aspects, to drive his creativity and focus his wandering mind. Taylor Swift may have these qualities—but whether the two of them will be together on 14th February remains to be seen.

Valentine's Day isn't just about chocolates, roses, and romantic dinners. What most couples really want is a celebration of the spiritual bond between them. If you want to do more than just "go through the motions" this year, here are four tips to make it not just romantic, but truly meaningful.

DEEPEN YOUR SPIRITUAL BOND: VALENTINE'S DAY TIPS

#1 THINK OUTSIDE THE CHOCOLATE BOX

Everybody likes nice things, but giving and receiving can become as routine as a trip to the corner shop. A tie, a bracelet, a bouquet of flowers—these are all fine and good, but a gift only has meaning when it serves as an active symbol of spiritual connection. Predictable rituals do little feed the flames. So—consider a gift that truly reflects how you feel. Hand-made gifts are the best, as they show thought and consideration over time. There's no harm throwing a treat into the mix, but thought and feeling is what really makes a gift special.

#3 MEDITATE ON LOVE

We spend a lot of time in our heads these days, but our hearts are where the real treasure is found. Valentine's Day can be made extra special by taking time out to contemplate love, read a spiritual passage about love, or perform psychic exercises—such as meditation and visualisation—that deepen our immediate sense of love. The source of love is a deep, quiet place within us; and if we look to that source, our outward expressions of love will be deeper and more resonant.

#2 GO BEYOND ROMANCE

Romantic love is a special part of Valentine's Day, no doubt—but it isn't everything. Love is a universal spiritual force, and the only limitations it has are the ones we place on it. This Valentine's Day, turn your focus not just to your own special someone, but to the many people whose lives are interconnected with yours. Allow the energy of love to inspire you, whether through random acts of kindness, phone calls to family members, or special gestures toward friends who mean the world to you. This will make your romantic connections even more profound.

#4 EVERY DAY IS THE 14TH

14th Feb is a special day for love, and it's nice to express our feelings on that day. But if love really describes what we feel for another person, what's the point of waiting a whole year before celebrating again? Set a date on your calendar—a date not too far in the future—and surprise your partner with a romantic gesture. A poem, a dinner, a weekend getaway. Allow love to flow into your world more freely. You'll feel your romantic connection deepen, yes—but the psychic and spiritual rewards will go far beyond that.

Looking for guidance on love?

free your love life from the past...

When you're in love with someone, the whole world seems brighter. Daily tasks seem easier, and little things don't get to you as much. Your love for that person is like a soft, psychic pillow that eases all the frictions of daily life.

But love can also leave a mark. Relationships that were once sweet can turn sour, and feelings that seemed unshakeable can suddenly change course. When this happens, we might question the value of romance in our lives, or struggle to move on and start something new. Indeed, past relationship energy is often the biggest obstacle between single people and the relationships they truly want. Potential mates can detect when someone is jaded or embroiled in past heartaches, and more often than not, this makes them less likely to approach. As Khalil Gibran so aptly wrote, "If your heart is a volcano, how shall you expect flowers to bloom?"

For people with a great deal of relationship baggage, Valentine's Day can be a good time to prepare the way forward. The good news is, there are definite ways to clear past energy and put yourself in better position to embrace new love.

First, we have to understand what relationship baggage is. Most often, it consists of unresolved feelings for someone in the past. On a subconscious level, you might still feel the two of you are meant to be together. You might think the relationship ended by mistake, and will start up again in the future, no matter how improbable it seems.

The other aspect of relationship baggage are negative self-reflections that result from past relationships. Often times, because of the way a relationship ended, we feel that we aren't capable of being loved, or that our personal qualities aren't enough to hold the interest of someone special. This is a form of negative thinking and self-sabotage that most of us have felt at one time or another.

Awareness of our own psychic baggage—what it consists of, and where it came from—is the first step toward breaking free. Sometimes even doing this is difficult, and in such cases, a talented psychic can often help uncover the true source of relationship blocks, and give you advice on how to clear the energy.

Sometimes it's healthy to write a letter to a person from your past and let your feelings out. Whether or not you send that letter is another question—but great healing can take place either way. The act of putting your feelings into words, directed to that person alone, is a good way to clear psychic energy that you have been holding. If you find the letter to be full of hope and longing for the relationship to begin again, don't be hard on yourself. Allow the energy to come out, and sit with it. After a time, you should be willing to write another letter—one with an emphasis on letting go. Many people find that burning such letters at the appropriate time (carefully, of course) can be an effective way to release the energies contained therein, and free up inner space.

Crystals, talismans and fragrances are good auxiliary tools for releasing past relationship energy. Blue Calcite is a great stone for closing past wounds and embracing the present fully. It gives off balancing, restorative vibrations, and can be useful to have near you. In terms of incense, Rosemary and Sandalwood have been used for centuries to release past energies in general, and can be useful for love in particular.

Lastly, objects and spaces can hold us back when it comes to love. It can be hard to let go of mementos because they represent the last remaining connections to a past beloved—but the truth is, such objects are psychically charged, and moving on may mean letting go of them for good. If you still live in a house or apartment where you once lived with a past love, this presents another challenge. Giving the house a good psychic cleansing with incense, bells, and even the help of a psychic can be enormously useful. Sometimes, moving out altogether is a critical step toward moving on.

Letting go may be hard, but it's a lot easier when you remember why you're doing it. Somewhere out there, a more fulfilling relationship awaits. You can't rush it, but you can coax it along by preparing yourself psychically to embrace it.
